

This image shows a large, dark, irregularly shaped stone fragment, likely a piece of ancient Greek or Roman inscribed stone. The fragment is heavily weathered and has a rough, uneven surface. The top portion of the fragment features several lines of text in a highly stylized, possibly Ptolemaic or Roman-era script, which is more legible than the dense, smaller script covering the rest of the fragment. The text is arranged in horizontal lines, following the contours of the stone. The overall appearance is that of an archaeological find, possibly a fragment of a larger inscription or a small tablet.
